HELL GATE OBSTRUCTIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—
My attention has been called to an article, signed "An Old New Yorker." which appeared in your paper of the 25th inst., in which he quotes General paper of the 25th mat., in which he quotes dehermal. Newton as having stated before a meeting of the East River improvement Association, concerning surveys that have been made of Heil Gate, "The first was made by Admiral Porter twenty years ago, the next by Mr. Davis, and the third, in 1856, by Lieutenant Crayen. These were only partial surveys of the rocks to get estimates of the probable expense of their r moval.

Ohl New Yorker" he would have noticed that General Newton's remarks at that meeting had not been reonly given of their general purport, and that General Newton could not be held responsible for the literal accuracy of such report.

What General Newton did say in substance was that surveys had been made by Admiral Porter, Admiral (not Mr) Davis and by Lieutenant Craven, and besides these partial surveys also of certain rocks to obtain data for estimating the cost of their re-

mo:ai
"An Old New Yorker" asks, "Are there no perfected surveys made by or under the superintendence of Professor A. B. Bache, United States Coast Survey?" If this person had known as much of the whom he so captiously takes to task he would have en aware that Porter, Davis and Craven were, United States Coast Survey under Professor Bache, and that their reports and maps be ong to Bache, and that their reports and maps be ong to that branch of the service. General Newton supposed every one 15 have knowledge of these facts. For the rest "An Old New Yorker" is respectfully invited to read General Newton's report to the Engineer Eureau of January 21, 1887, where he will find notes of Davis', Forter's and Craven's reports and maps, as likewise of partial surveys by Major Fruser, by Mr. Edwards and of a survey of Fot Rock, exhibiting two and a half feet more of water upon that rock than subsequent surveys made by Major Fruser, by Mr. Edwards and of a survey of Fot Rock, exhibiting two and a half feet more of water upon that rock than subsequent surveys made by Major Fruser could find.

"An Olo New Yorker," who seems over-sensitive and winces where no offence was meant, again faults General Newton with saying, "At that time (fuppose 1853) the art of blasting was in its infancy, and the expense of removing gr. at recis seemed beyond the power of human undertaking." Whether these were General Newton's exact words or not is immaterial; he was speaking of the fact that previous to the date of his report there is no record of a recommentation by any one to remove the great reefs. Admirals Porter and Davis, General Totten and Professor Bache have at various periods recommended the removal of the small rocks, as Frying Pan, Pot Rock, Way's Reef, Shelldrake, &c.; but instead of an attempt to remove the great reef called the Gridron, which Admiral Davis characterizes as "Owing to the strong set of the tide upon it the most dangerous reef in the passage," these officers had recommended a wall to be built upon its channel margin, furnished with spring fenders to sheer off vessels, which structure would cost by estimate nearly $1,000,000.

Admiral Porter, in his report, recommended filling about a foot. The inference is obvious, that the process promised great results so long as projecting and salient points were offered to the explosive effect of the charges; but a lamentable falling off took place when a uniform and flat surface was reached. At Pot Rock a depth of twenty-four feet at mean low water was promised and about twenty feet attained; and, so far as known to the writer, no entire rock in New York harbor has been removed by the process of surface blasting to the required depth of twenty-four feet at mean low water, though frequent trials have been made. It matters little what the cause may have been, the fact is believed to be as stated, and until the advocates of this method can prove the contrary they are debarred from claiming that they have attained a certain or even probable success.

So far as known, practical men are strongly adverse to the use of this process, as eminently uncertain, in the first place, and as eventually leading to unnecessary expense in the second. It might be partially used, however, to blow off projections and level the rock for operations by another mode.

After arriving at a flat surface the method of surface blasting is generally effectual only by pulverizing the rock and reducing it to small fragments, which indicates a great waste of power and time.

The process of surface biasting claimed by Mr Manilefert was practised by the Royal Engineers upon soft rock, and it is generally asserted that he learned the method while serving under them.

The following is an extract from a letter written by a distinguished English artist after a visit to Pempeit and Anglest—I must notice one fact concerning this piace for which I was not at all prepared, and thus is, that the city is more like a doil's model than a hadration for human creatures of the size of lifer and yet the Pompeians were this, for one of the skeletons was found to be a little talker than myself, and I certainly want a house with rooms larger than a chest of drawers. They have been discovering and not before obtained, although from Pliny, if I received anglist, it was known that the art was practised. I am very sorry to learn the fact that the pictures on the walls of the houses and those presented in the museum are gradually losing the Forlience and clearness—are, in short, slowly disappearing through exposure to the air. Certain pictures have been discovered near Amalit, and others in the Basilica di S. Angelo in Formis, of the eleventh century, which prove that Cimabue was anticipated in his bursting of the Revantine art fetters by nearly three centuries. I am stad to believe this, for I have seen one of the frescoes, that hear Amalit, and certainly that is better than anything I ever saw by Cimabue. I was going to add thotio, but this would be a little too much to say, although certainly the wenderful luck in all trecente people in the exaggerated kndos they have received does tempt one to stretch a point to make the ordinace just. The Neaponians certainly never carried art very far after its rise. The gallery (at Napies) contains a wonderful inches portant of Paul the Third, by Titian, and another, very interesting, which was abandoned half way. Napies has some wonderful view about it.

The Paris opera was established by the following edic, remarkable for its ingentious and patriarchal tene, which was issued by Charles the Ninth in 150--we, which was sessed by Charles the Ninth in 150--we, charles, by the grace of 60d, King of France, and to see that iterative the power of the more of th

THE NATIONAL GAME.

Brooklyn vs. New York.

The picked nines from the three leading clubs of New York and the three leading clubs of Brooklyn were not on hand at the Union grounds yesterday, as expected, to take part in the game on the occasion of the testimonial to John Zeller. Two very good nines were made up and a friendly game in contest had every appearance of being a first class affair. After that, however, there seemed to be more of an inclination to show good nature rather than good playing. Not that good nature and good playing are incompatible, but that the players grew careless, laughed at their mistakes and did not try to offset their "muffs" by over exertion to make any very creditable display. The crowd in attendance was by no means as large as the nature of the occasion

On Thursday afternoon these veteran organiza-tions met for the second time this season to have a friendly contest. The game resulted in a victory for the Excelsiors in the field and for the Knicker-bockers as hosts at the hotel. The meeting was one of those hearty, good-natured, gentlemanly affairs which have for the past decade of years marked the contests of these organizations. The score of the game is as follows:-
